Vogue Meets Vintage

The kitchen in this 1941 cottage was located uncomfortably far from the rest of the house, as a result of certain unsuccessful home additions. In the new, centrally located kitchen designed for a young couple, the overall aesthetic was inspired by the days of early pioneers. Elements such as alligator-patterned porcelain, rustic beechwood butcher-block, a white farmhouse sink, and vintage-style filament light fixtures, employ an antique material vocabulary within a modern design language.

The Modern Marvel

This sleek condominium kitchen features modern conveniences such as new, compact European appliances, white quartz countertops, demi-high units housing the oven and microwave, integrated refrigerator, and a compact wall-mounted wine chiller in a corner space, accessible from the back of the peninsula. The ceiling detail embraces the depth of the pot light, and adds lightness and interest to the space. The use of pop-up countertop receptacles enables the uninterrupted flow of the glass backsplash. Not to mention, the articulating faucet adds whimsy and fun to the structured design of the kitchen, featuring straight and clean lines. Other special features such as long lift-up hardware and grain match veneer give this kitchen the finishing edge.

This kitchen features an inexpensive, rustic butcher-block counter that contrasts with the modern white cabinetry. Wrapped butcher-block is also integrated around the upper cabinets and island, contributing to the consistency in design. A doubled breakfast island increases counter space, while also providing additional storage with the concealed lower cabinets. Dark porcelain plank-format floors throughout the house emphasize and complete the subtle and natural feel created in the kitchen, while allowing continuity and integration with adjacent rooms. The economical marriage of modernity and antiquity truly does impress!
